Flower Queen to Entertain Brilliantly for Her Maids

The royalty of youth, beauty and girlish charm, which, after all, has ruled more dynasties than any sovereign power, will be present in all its glory at the flower ball of her majesty, Queen Maude, the fair and beautiful young queen of the centennial celebration of Memphis, at the Memphis Country club Tuesday evening.

The gracious and lovely young queen will be attended by her 15 beautiful maids of honor, who have been appointed by the governors of the Southern states to share in the festivities of the one hundredth anniversary of the queen city of the South, and who are as follows:

Misses Jewett Swift and Floecie May Phillips, representing Shelby county; Miss Evellina Kenner and Miss Sarah Shannon, of Nashville, and Miss Irene Bond, of Bolivar, representing Tennessee; Miss Jean Hollenberg, of Little Rock, Miss Mary Zane, of Wynne, Miss Olivia Thomas, of Marlinton, Miss Willie Gathings, of Earle, and Miss Edna Buford, of Forrest City, representing Arkansas; Miss Kathleen Fitzgerald, of Vicksburg, Miss Adele Day, of Jackson, Miss Eleanor McCormick, and Miss Ethel Gregory, of Senatobia, representing Mississippi, and Miss Marion Bond, of Jefferson City, representing Missouri.

Wearing the exquisite costumes in which they will appear in the magnificent procession of flowers Tuesday afternoon, the queen and her maids will receive the guests.

Queen Maude's costume is of pure white georgette crepe, made in the oriental style and heavily embroidered in pearls and rhinestones. Her crown is in the form of an Egyptian head-dress of pearls and rhinestones, while oriental bracelets studded with the jewels will encircle her arms and ankles. She will wear white sandals, bound with silver thongs and clasps of pearls upon her bare feet.

Although the gowns of the maids of honor are all made strictly in the Egyptian style, the two are alike and each is of an individual gorgeous shade. Fashioned of heavy georgette crepe over flesh-toned satin, with Egyptian girdles studded with gems of every hue, they truly resemble the famous creations of the orient worn in the days of Cleopatra, Egypt's favorite and famous queen. The brilliant shades of the gowns enhance the beauty of their lovely wearers, the colors blending harmoniously and adding the final oriental touch. They are Nile green, serpent green, orchid, lily pink, royal purple, burnt orange, liana, gold, azure, peacock blue and crimson.

The magnificent oriental headresses of gold, studded with brilliant and gems, and like the queen, will wear sandals, bound with silver thongs and clasps of brilliant, while bracelets of gold and gems will encircle their ankles.

The Country club will be an appropriate setting for this gathering of youth and beauty, for every rooming of the florist's art is displayed in the decorating of the rooms of the club for the occasion. The living rooms of the club will be a veritable bower of American Beauty and Russell roses, while all the beautiful flowers of the season and summer have been used to make the ballroom a worthy setting for the festivities of the queen of the flowers, Miss Renkert.

Assisting Miss Renkert and her maids of honor in receiving the 300 guests for the evening will be her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Renkert.

Following the reception, dancing will be enjoyed until the hour of midnight. During the intermissions between dances fruit punch will be served, and at midnight the guests will enjoy a delicious salad and ice course.

Even Broken Arm Did Not Stop Her

MISS RUTH EVELYN SMITH.

Not even a broken arm could keep this little lady from going to school, and she was the proud winner of a gold medal for excellent scholarship and attendance.

She is the year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Smith, of Rockwood avenue, near the Macon road, and is a pupil of the Treadwell school. Her scholarship average for the term was 98 per cent, and several weeks of that time she attended school with a severely broken arm rather than miss her school. Her mother had been made that one would be awarded, and it came as a joyful surprise for her, but love for her teacher, Miss Evelyn Rutland, and interest in her studies make school a delightful game for her.

Bondsmen Only Ones To Have Special Charge

Judge Ed Richards of the first criminal court, in his charge to the new grand jury presented nothing new except an urgent admonition thoroughly to examine all cases and indict all persons who schedule encumbered property with the sheriff when qualifying as bondsmen.

The judge also urged the grand jury to use its best efforts in investigating cases of violation of the liquor laws without fear or favor and also indict in every instance where the ex parte evidence justifies, all persons selling narcotics and all persons carrying concealed weapons for the purpose of going armed.

The grand jury was given final instruction by the clerk of the court, the judge and the attorney-general in the jury room and then was excused until Tuesday of next week. There will be no grand jury session during this week on account of the centenary celebration.

The new grand jury is composed of John E. Thomas, Capleville, cotton merchant, foreman for two years; E. G. Tate, 1914 Peabody, bookkeeper, secretary for the term; T. H. Hill, 1630 Carr avenue, superintendent, Memphis Terminal corporation; Herman Buthenthal, 1252 Peabody, real estate, loans and investments; T. J. Dale, Knoxville, farmer; John T.
